

Introduction to Modern Computer Architecture. A computer processes information using a central processing unit, memory, and storage. Modern software runs on operating systems that manage hardware resources efficiently. Programmers write code in languages such as Python to build applications, including machine learning systems and databases. Vector databases allow a computer to search large collections of documents by meaning rather than exact keyword matches.